Course Outline
Politics and Religion covers a broad range of issues and concerns of interest to the student of Comparative Politics and International Relations: political theology, institutional formation and change, state power and authority, legitimacy and resistance, nationalism, as well as the shifting and productive boundaries between the sacred and the profane, the religious and the secular. This seminar will address these issues through a comparative exploration of religion and politics in Asian, European, North American and international contexts. The course will introduce students to a variety of different approaches to religion, exploring the tensions between them. These include but are not limited to positivist approaches that posit religion as a causal factor, public policy-orientated approaches that view religion as a challenge to and an instrument for governance, and interpretivist and poststructuralist approaches that seek to undermine “religion” as a social scientific concept.

The course will begin with an introduction to rival approaches to the study of religion in relation to politics. It will proceed to cover themes in the development of the relationship between religion and politics, including in relation to state formation and economic development, nationalism, and democratization; migration, foreign policy, security; imperialism, law, capitalism and neo-liberalism.

Teaching
Students will attend 14 seminars in the course of the year (2 hours each). Students are expected to participate actively in the seminar discussions, including taking leadership of at least one critical discussion of the readings.

Assessment
Students are expected to write one 5,000-word essay that explores a question of relevance to the core themes and topics of the course. Questions will be set by the seminar leaders and released in January 2019 on a date to be confirmed by the MPhil director. Please ensure that essays are appropriately formatted, citations are consistent, and bibliography attached; it is the student’s responsibility to familiarise themselves with the University’s guidelines on academic honesty and plagiarism. The essay is due in at noon on 15th March 2019. The essay is worth 100% of the final grade.

Practice essay
Students must write one practice essay for this course. The essay should be approximately 2,000 words. The deadline for the essay is 9 November 2018 (alternatively: 30 November 2018). You should submit an electronic copy of your essay via Moodle. Essay questions will be circulated early in Michaelmas term.

Readings
Under each seminar, readings are divided into two groups. Essential readings will form the main basis for discussion in the seminars. Recommended readings are provided as a guide for students who wish to explore topics in further depth.

The SPS/Seeley library will have most of the readings assigned for the seminars; others will be available at the UL and the library of the Centre of South Asian Studies, which is located in the Alison Richard Building. Many articles and book chapters can be accessed electronically through the course website on Moodle or the University Library’s electronic resources.
