The following policy applies to examinations taken in the following University Examinations:

Human, Social, and Political Sciences Tripos, Parts I and II
Archaeology Tripos, Part I and II
All MPhil, MRes and MSt courses offered by the Faculty

The following data are retained in the relevant Tripos office (Part I only) or in the relevant Departmental Offices (Part II and the relevant MPhils / MRes)

At the end of the retention period, data are either destroyed or anonymised and used for statistical analysis. Examination scripts are retained for six months following the publication of the class list but are not released to students. Where data will be kept for procedural or rubric infringements, all academic judgements relating to that student will also be retained, but will not be made available to students as standard.

Examiners and assessors are expressly instructed not to write comments on scripts. Where notation is included – most commonly on language/translation scripts – in the form of underlining, marginal references in the form of question marks, etc, this will be communicated separately from the scripts themselves. However, it should be noted that such data, taken in isolation, are intended mainly to guide the examiners and assessors and are unlikely to be of material benefit in indicating a student’s performance on a particular paper.

In the case of a formal appeal, ALL data on the individual concerned that is held at the time of the formal appeal should be retained until the appeal process is completed. Data on marks and individual coursework may be retained in the case of students degrading.

Release of data under this policy does not constitute a formal subject access request under data protection legislation. Formal requests for access to all other personal data should be directed to the University’s Information Compliance Office (https://www.information-compliance.admin.cam.ac.uk/data-protection/subject-access-request).

In the first instance, all data should be requested in writing, noting the course and year of study, from:
