HISTORICAL TRIPOS PART II: PAPER 5

POLITICAL PHILOSOPHY & THE HISTORY OF POLITICAL THOUGHT SINCE C.1890

COURSE GUIDE AND READING LIST 2019 – 2020

Course organisers:

Prof Duncan Kelly, djk36@cam.ac.uk (POLIS) [Michaelmas], and Dr Samuel Zeitlin (Corpus Christi/Polis) [Lent and Easter]

This paper explores some of the central texts and key ideas of twentieth and twenty-first century political thought, looking at both analytical concepts and their historical contexts and evolution. It provides the opportunity to trace the development of political ideas into the twentieth century and further into contemporary political philosophy. This includes many ideas that students will have encountered in other contexts – freedom, democracy, revolution, equality, international relations and global justice – as well as some that may be new or less familiar – for instance, ecology, punishment or welfare. It also provides an opportunity to explore the history of political thought and political philosophy more generally, and to consider what studying politics historically or theoretically brings to our understanding of politics in practice.

The paper is divided into two parts. Section A covers a number of historical topics, Section B a variety of themes in contemporary political philosophy that have some historical, and some purely normative, elements. It is possible to concentrate on one side or other of the paper, but students will be required to answer at least one question from each section. Like the earlier History of Political Thought papers, Section A encourages the contextual study of key political texts and debates. It introduces you to important thinkers such as Nietzsche, Weber, Hayek or Rawls; to developments in the Marxist and liberal traditions of political thought; and to significant political debates, such as those accompanying the crisis of the Weimar Republic, or the emergence of American political science. Section B introduces students to themes in contemporary political philosophy. Through the study of such themes such as, for example, post-colonialism, property, sovereignty and obligation, students can explore how modern philosophical arguments can be engaged both as a normative dialogue with a range of contemporary and classic texts, as well as being seen to emerge as historically-specific claims about politics and political ideas in their own idea.

Overall then, this is a varied paper that offers a chance to explore some familiar ideas in more detail or in more contemporary contexts; to encounter new ideas; and to reflect on what political philosophy means for the study of politics in the round.

Approaches

There are many different ways of approaching this paper. One is to find topics in section A and section B that complement each other. For instance, the historical study of Marxist thought in section A (A3, A5, A6 or A9) links up well with the philosophical study of equality, needs and welfare in section B (B25). Liberal critics of totalitarianism (A11) can be connected up with concepts of liberty (B18) and democracy and representation (B20). Hayek (A12) makes a good link with property and markets (B26). Rawls (A14) ties in directly with recent arguments about global justice (B27) as well as to longer-running arguments about rights and utilitarianism (B17). Theorists and critics of imperialism (A7) complement philosophical arguments about post-colonialism (B22). It is also possible to find links between topics within the two sections. Nietzsche (A1) was a significant influence on Weber (A4) and also on many of the critics of Weimar (A8). Lukács (A6) provided inspiration for the thought of the earlier Frankfurt School (A9). Hayek (A12), as well as being one of the liberal critics of totalitarianism (A13), was engaged with many of the ideas that also concerned Rawls (A14). The study of patriotism (B22) complements the study of multiculturalism (B23). Ideas of sovereignty (B16) are closely connected to ideas of war (B24). These are just some examples. There are many more ways to find interesting links between the different parts of the paper.

It is not always necessary, however, to study these topics in connection with each other. They can also make sense on their own, and you should feel free to explore topics and ideas that do not necessarily connect up. Nietzsche, for instance, was not a feminist but that is no reason not to study Nietzsche alongside feminism (and many feminists have been interested in Nietzsche). Hayek can be studied alongside the Marxists as well as alongside the critics of Marxism with whom he belongs. Some topics are sufficiently broad that they connect with most of the paper: politics and morality (B15) for example, or political philosophy and the history of political thought (B29). These topics can be useful as a way of grounding study for the paper as a whole.

The best way for you to decide what to study is in conjunction with your supervisor, who can give more detailed advice on what goes with what. Not all supervisors will feel able to teach on all topics. If you have a particular topic you wish to study that your supervisor cannot cover, you should contact the course organiser, who will try where possible to set up one-off supervisions on those topics with another supervisor.

B26 Property and Markets
B27 Global Justice
B28 Ecology and the Future of Humanity
B29 Political Philosophy and the History of Political Thought

In the examination students will be asked to answer three questions, including at least one from each section. At least one question will be asked on each topic. Overlap between answers must be avoided.

The examination rubric will read: Candidates must answer three questions, at least ONE from Section A and at least ONE from Section B.

Sample exam paper

Candidates must answer three questions, at least ONE from Section A and at least ONE from Section B.

Section A

1. Why was Nietzsche so concerned to refute the work of earlier philosophers when making claims about politics?
2. How effective was the pluralist critique of the state?
3. Did Bernstein win the revisionist debate?
4. What did Max Weber hope for from ordinary Germans in a democratic state?
5. Did Marxism meet the challenges posed to revolutionary strategy by WWI?
6. Why did Lukács think that Lenin had resolved the problem of theory and practice in Marxism?
7. Were theorists of imperialism necessarily also theorists of capitalism, and if so, with what consequences? Answer with reference to at least two of the following: Fanon, Lenin, Schumpeter, Veblen.

8. Why was the concept of sovereignty so crucial to debates about the Weimar Constitution?
9. To what extent did the earlier Frankfurt School share an understanding of the Nazi state?
10. Consider the importance of either technology or language to the critique of capitalism made by the late Frankfurt School. Answer with reference to two or more of its members.
11. 'The only thing liberal critics of totalitarianism had in common was a suspicion of planning.' Discuss with reference to two or more of these critics.
12. Is Hayek best understood politically as a libertarian or a skeptic?
13. Were American empirical theories of democracy necessarily conservative?
14. Did Rawls think a "property-owning democracy" was the best way to achieve justice in a liberal society?

Section B

15. In what sense, if any, must political theories be practically feasible?
16. Why are so many idealist political philosophers concerned with the problem of political obligation?
17. Either (a) If rights are enforceable claims, why is it so difficult to enforce claims about human rights or economic justice?
Or (b) Is utilitarianism more concerned with the rules governing our actions, or the consequences of those actions?
18. 'The attempt to quantify concepts of liberty was always a waste of time.' Discuss.
19. What, if anything, does the state express when it punishes?
20. Why are so many political theorists committed to the view that democratic representation has paradoxical qualities?
21. Is feminist political theory too concerned with performativity over economic injustice?
22. Either (a) Is liberal nationalism a contradiction in terms?
Or (b) How does post-colonialism challenge established narratives of international law?
23. Why are debates about toleration often so intolerant?
24. Why has 'realism' been so contested in international relations theory since the Cold War?
25. Is inequality always morally bad?
26. Either (a) How does inequality of property threaten modern political stability?
Or (b) Can one be both economically libertarian and politically egalitarian?
27. How solid a foundation is cosmopolitanism for claims about global justice?
28. Either (a) Can political theory make a useful contribution to debates about the future of humanity?
Or (b) is deep ecology an idea whose time is now past?
29. Do debates within the history of political thought have consequences for political theory?

Exam papers and examiners reports

Past exams and examiners reports are available via the History Faculty website: <https://www.hist.cam.ac.uk/undergraduate/cam-only/past-papers/part2>. Students are encouraged to consult these for guidance and examples of essay questions.

Introductory reading

There are a number of collections and anthologies that give introductions to many of the authors and philosophical topics covered by this paper. The first two listed are primarily useful for section A; the remainder are primarily useful for section B of the paper.

T.R. Baldwin (ed.) The Cambridge History of Philosophy 1870-1945 (Cambridge, 2003) [available at www.histories.cambridge.org].

T. Ball and R. Bellamy (eds.) The Cambridge History of Twentieth-Century Political Thought (Cambridge, 2003) [available at www.histories.cambridge.org].

D. Estlund, The Oxford Handbook of Political Philosophy (Oxford, 2012).

W. Kymlicka, Contemporary Political Philosophy: An Introduction 2nd ed. (Oxford 2001).

R. Goodin, P. Pettit, and T. Pogge (eds.), A Companion to Contemporary Political Philosophy, 2nd ed., 2 vols. (Oxford, 2007).

P. Pettit and R. Goodin (eds.) Contemporary Political Philosophy: An Anthology (Malden, MA, 2006).

J. S. Dryzek, B. Honig and A. Phillips (eds.), The Oxford Handbook of Political Theory (Oxford, 2006).

Students may also find it useful to begin reading with some of the classic recent texts in political philosophy, which provide the basis for many later arguments. These include:

J. Rawls, A Theory of Justice (Oxford, 1971).

R. Nozick, Anarchy, State and Utopia (Oxford, 1974).

M. Sandel, Liberalism and the Limits of Justice (Cambridge, 1982).

M. Walzer, Spheres of Justice (Oxford, 1983).

J. Shklar, Ordinary Vices (Harvard, 1984).

S. Moller Okin, Justice, Gender and the Family (New York, 1989).

Lectures

Lectures will not cover every author and topic for this paper. Instead they are there to give some grounding in various themes of the paper and to introduce the ideas of different authors and topics. They provide the basis for supervision work and should be helpful in deciding which authors and topics to study, but are not a substitute for direct engagement with the texts. The lectures provided for Paper 5/POL 11 take place in the History Faculty unless stated otherwise. They are listed below.

Lectures put on by Faculties other than POLIS and History that may be of interest but which are not core lectures for this paper, are cross-listed on the full lecture lists here (History) and here (POLIS). Please note that these lectures are not formally part of the course, and the paper organisers are not informed of changes that might be made to their scheduling. We only point them out as they may be of interest.

Note: the lecture timetable for 2019-20 is yet to be finalised. Once it is, an updated version of this guide will be made available on the POLIS and History websites, and the Course Moodle.

Reading List

The full reading list for this paper is given below. In Section A, the main readings are listed under 'Set texts'. Asterisked entries under 'Further reading suggestions' provide useful starting points for developing your argument. Where additional primary texts are listed under further reading they are not normally starred but are often helpful to read. In Section B there are no primary set texts but a mixture of classic and particularly useful contemporary readings are listed with an asterisk. The subdivisions for each topic are simply there to help navigate what is a rather large reading list.

The normal expectation is that you would read 2-3 primary texts (for Section A) or asterisked readings (for Section B), as well as 2-3 secondary readings when preparing supervision essays.
