Yours,
Mx. Mordecai Paechter,
Graduate Secretary and Alumni Contact

Welcome to the fresh new look of your monthly alumni newsletter from the University. We've made some changes to improve the way the email reads in the latest version of some common email software.

As always, we would be delighted to hear your thoughts — email us at: contact@alumni.cam.ac.uk.

Recent graduates and incoming students excited for the future

As always at this time of year, POLIS is very excited to have received a new intake of students for the MPhil in International Relations and Politics, and also to see our outgoing students continuing onto the next stage of their careers. We asked a handful of our incoming students and recent graduates if they could tell us about what they hope to achieve in the recent future.

Spotlight: Robyn Curnow

"I had a purple bike..."

The wicker basket attached to the handlebars was big, but never seemed big enough. My basket and its contents would gently bob up and down as I peddled from Magdalene, along cobbled streets to the Centre for International Relations for lectures. Often I would make a quick stop at Fitzbillies for a Chelsea bun and tea before dashing into a tutorial or a lecture."

Talking Politics Podcast Latest Episode - Catalonia

Corbyn! Trump! Brexit! Politics has never been more unpredictable, more alarming or more interesting. TALKING POLITICS is the podcast that will try to make sense of it all.

In our latest episode, as the face-off between Madrid and Barcelona continues, we explore how this happened and where it might end. Marc Weller, chair of the independent commission on Catalan independence, explains the legal background and historian Brendan Simms sets out what is at stake for European politics. Could this be the crisis that brings the whole thing crashing down? With Helen Thompson and Chris Brooke.
